WorldGeo is a lightweight and very simple to understand software solution aimed at Windows 8.1 devices, whose main function resides in helping you assess your knowledge in the field of geography, being able to practice and learn the position, flag and capital city of countries around the Globe. Clean and intuitive appearance The application features a colorful and appealing user interface, making it accessible both for adults who need to brush up on their geography and children to study and prepare for school exams. The main window of WorldGeo lets you choose the continent you need to focus on, be it America, Europe or Asia, with Oceania and Africa being still under development. It also lets you enable or disable audio effects. Assess your knowledge of geography and acquire new information The program features three distinct difficulty levels, specifically 'Easy', 'Average' and 'Hard', according to the information you are provided with as a clue: 'Name, Capital and Flag', 'Capital and Flag' or 'Flag Only', respectively. Regardless of the choice you make, WorldGeo will start asking you a series of questions and offer the clue corresponding to the selected level of difficulty. To input your answer, you need to zoom in on the country, then click it to respond. Should it be correct, it will turn from white to green. However, if your answer it wrong, it turns red and points you to the right country. Every question you answer is timed and scored, so when complete, you can learn your best performance so far, as well as determine how far you have come, after a studying session for instance. A handy means of testing your geography knowledge To sum it up, WorldGeo is an interesting educational program for computers running Windows 8.1 as an operating system, that you can resort to, should you wish to demonstrate you still remember geography basics you learned in school or acquire new information.
